SUMMARY OF INFORMATION:

There is something round that is spiraling down or moving downward in a circular motion. There are two curved shapes, possibly large rocks, that have something in between them or just empty space. There is a structure that is curved on top and seems to have many boxy looking rooms. There is a dog or some kind of animal. There is a round bright object that seems to be shining. There are people here, but only a few. They seem to be inside some small machines and moving upward toward the air, but they aren't in the air. Sculpting comes to mind. There is something wooden, or stacks of long, rounded pieces of wood, like logs. It is cold and I feel that I am outside, possibly in the woods. There are many paths. They are mostly straight and then they criss cross, like looking at the lights of a city from far away. There is a long object sticking out of the structure. There is an uphill mountain and people seem to be climbing the mountain.

Charging toward history, last year's Triple Crown winner Secretariat (above, third from right) bursts late from the starting gate in the Kentucky Derby. His number, 1A, indicates that his trainer, Lucien Laurin, has another horse in the same race. Giant 25-foot strides help Secretariat make up the lost jardage. Virginia-born but Bluegrass-sired, he blazed over the 1½-mile course in 1 minute, 59½ seconds—a new Derby record.

Putting her money where her mouth is, a sun-splashed blonde tries to register a bet with a friend (left). Crowding the stands and the infield, 134,476 people filled Churchill Downs for the 1973 Derby; they wagered more than three million dollars on the event.
